

MARINES ARE LANDED AT VERA CRUZ

SENATE STILL DEBATES WILSON'S RESOLUTION

SENATOR LODGE TAKES STRENUOUS ISSUE WITH PRESIDENT'S WORDING OF REQUEST TO CONGRESS FOR AUTHORITY.

FLETCHER IS ORDERED TO ACT

Authorized to Land Marines and Take Possession of Custom House at Mexican Sea Port and Confiscate Large Consignment of Munitions of War.

[By Associated Press.]
Washington, April 21, 3:20 P.M.—Secretary Daniels said he had no word of developments at Vera Cruz. Official circles heard without comment the report that marines had been landed and taken possession of the custom house. It was said Admiral Fletcher had orders to land no men unless the ship's complement of munition had been landed.

Washington, April 21.—Members of the house filed into the senate chamber into the crowded rear of the hall. Minority Leader Underwood took a seat on the democratic side.

Senator Lodge opened the debate. "In a state of high seriousness such as now confronts Congress it is well to remember the offices of the Senate," he began. "The power to declare war rests with Congress. When the President lays an international controversy before Congress he takes the last step that is preparatory to a declaration of war," commented Mr. Lodge.

"The President might take further steps but he laid the question before this body which alone has power to declare war and I think he has done well."

Lodge's Comment.

Senator Lodge took up the pending resolution.

"This resolution uses the word 'justify' instead of 'authorize,' he said. "The result will be the same. This resolution does not contemplate the declaration of war. The President in his message did not express any hostilities for the Mexican people but it carried with it armed intervention. The consequences of armed intervention are in many respects precisely the same as war. But they present a task less capable of speedy completion, less fertile in the glory of victories won and may bring a long period of the exercise of what would be the police power in a foreign country involving a vast expenditure, great loss of property and possibly months, perhaps years, and the only satisfaction being the feeling that we have brought back peace and order to a distracted country."

The House Action.

It was late last evening before the house voted favorably on the joint resolution concerning upon President Wilson the power he requested by a vote of 327 to 37. The following is the resolution passed:

"A joint resolution justifying the employment of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriana Huerta."

"Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives in congress assembled that the president of the United States is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands upon Victoriana Huerta for unequivocal amendments to the government of the United States for armistice and indemnities committed against this government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives."

Orders Sent.

While the senate discussed the Mexican crisis today, orders went forth to Admiral Fletcher in charge of the American fleet at Vera Cruz to seize the custom house at Vera Cruz to prevent a large cargo of artillery and ammunition from falling into the hands of the Huerta forces to whom it was consigned and which was being transported from Europe on a German naval vessel.

Step Necessary.

As there was no declaration of war by the United States could not seize the ship but it could seize the port and prevent them from being landed. It was to accomplish this obvious crippling of the provisional government of Mexico that Admiral Fletcher was instructed to sail South.

San Francisco, April 21.—The South Pacific fleet from the Fleet Gold navy entered San Francisco at 12:00 a.m. today. She will proceed to California City to take on provisions preparatory to departing for Mexican waters.

About five hundred marines from the Mare Island navy yard also will be taken on board the South Dakota which 260 marines from the north.

Super-dreadnaughts.

New York, April 21.—The new super-dreadnaughts, New York and Texas, the two largest battleships in the United States navy, are expected soon to be on duty in southern waters.

It was announced that the New York, which was placed in commission last week, would proceed to Guantanamo, Cuba, on Sunday. The New York has been under orders for some time and has proceeded to sea for her shaking down." Since the Mexican situation became acute the work of putting her in readiness has been pushed and a large amount of ammunition today was being stowed away on the New York and Texas.

Sail Sunday.

Unless orders to the contrary, are received prior to Sunday, said an official at the yards, the New York will proceed to Guatamano where she will be close to the Atlantic fleet which she can join at any time. The Texas is ready for service upon short notice.

Given Authority.

The orders to Admiral Fletcher conferred the proper authority and directed that if necessary he should take the city of Vera Cruz as well as the custom house in order to prevent the landing of the ammunition at that point.

Officials here pointed out that Admiral Fletcher might act in several ways. He might wait until the steamship had landed her cargo of ammunition and then take the custom house and munitions or when the German steamship comes into port might seize the custom house and then take possession of the munitions.

Not Resisted.

The war department report that Admiral Fletcher's forces would not be resisted and that Huerta forces intend to retreat to the railroad trestle, twenty miles west of Vera Cruz.

Had Ample Cause.

Administration officials pointed out that the president had ample cause for his action without the approval of congress and that immediate action had been imperative.

Momentarily officials expect dispatches from the admiral announcing that he had taken the custom house and possibly the city.

When the public foreign affairs committee met Chairman Flood said the house democrats would not oppose the Mexican resolution as amended for adoption by the senate foreign relations committee.

Equipment Shipped.

It is understood that the equipment that is to be seized consists of some two hundred of the latest model field guns, several million rounds of ammunition, rifles of the latest pattern and high powered explosives.

It is believed by authorities here that it was in hope of obtaining these that Huerta delayed matters as long as he has and that had not Fletcher been ordered to proceed as he was.

Shively's Views.

Senator Shively, acting chairman of the foreign relations committee, declared the pending resolution of paramount importance and the proposal leading up to the declaration of war in Spain as futile, he said. "I never intended to declare war. It may be too late to send peace. That act with the seizure of Vera Cruz. We are engaged at this moment," he said, "losing his voice emotionally, "not only in dealing with a question that can come before congress, but we are participating in a great historic action. The grounds of our action here will be before the world and will come to the tribunal of history. If we are to intervene in Mexico I want to look at above the level of personal hostilities and place it on the foreground of the rights of a nation taking into consideration the protection of American lives in a foreign country and for the purpose also of restoring peace and order if we can."

Shively's Arguments.

Senator Lodge resented any implication that the republicans were "jacking in proper respect for the flag," but we must also think of that which the flag covers, the citizens of the United States. He said one hundred and fifty American citizens had perished on Mexican soil. "I cannot, in demanding an atonement for the insult at Tam-pico, overlook these outrages. I can Chihuahua, via El Paso, April 21.—Consul Fletcher, on instructions from Washington, is notifying Americans in this city and other towns of the state of Chihuahua to leave the country as a precaution against the possible unfortunate eventualities which may grow out of the decision of the Washington government to seize Tampico and Vera Cruz. They will be sent in small bodies if time permits or a general exodus, it is feared, might precipitate trouble. Six American women left last night.

men and women arrived here today from Chihuahua with the word that they were ordered to leave by Marion believe that the rebels will be able to remain out of the Huerta-Wilson conflict, and added that the rebel leaders feel compelled to accept the view that the blockade of Tampico and Vera Cruz will be a national matter of Mexican regardless of political affiliations.

Asked Question.

Senator Wilson asked how long it will take to pass the Spanish resolution. Senator La Follette replied that congress took from April to April 19 to pass the resolution in 1898.

To Seize Ammunition.

Washington, April 21.—Administration officials early today confirmed the report that they planned to seize a million pounds of ammunition consigned to Huerta and now on the German ship nearing Vera Cruz.

Leaders were informed this is one of the reasons for prompt action in congress today.

The plan is to seize the ammunition

after it lands at the Vera Cruz customs house. Some officials thought the president would order it seized anyway if congress delay may deem such action necessary.

tary Daniels heard without comment the report that marines had been landed and taken possession of the custom house.

It was said Admiral Fletcher had orders to land no men unless the shipment of munition had been landed.

Asked Question.

Senator Lodge, on the floor of the senate, asked how long it would take to pass the Spanish resolution.

He said the president had not asked congress for authority because he did not wish to pursue war. Mr. Shively contended that the Lodge preamble would have no result but war.

"Extradition here is vital," said Senator Shively emphatically, "because this is an effort to preserve peace."

Not Resisted.

It is for that reason that the ministry of the committee on foreign relation has presented the substitute for the preamble of the resolution.

The senator added that the first act under the resolution would be the

JANESEVILLE SHOES USED BY INSURGENT TROOPS IN MEXICO

Lay-Waterson Company Ships Product to Border Line Cities to be Distributed in Mexico.

Many thousands of General Villa's constitutional army are wearing Janesville-made shoes and in fact, nearly all the troops stationed near the border line are wearing boots and high cuts made by the Lay-Waterson Shoe company in this city.

Since January 14th the Janesville company has been busy manufacturing high cut shoes and boots typical to those worn by the cowboys and rangers in Texas and Mexico, and since that time have shipped many thousands of pairs to border line cities in the United States as they would not be allowed to get them across the border without paying a fine and would be guilty of filibustering war supplies. The method used by the company was to forward large shipments of the light high cut shoes used by Mexican soldiers, to distributing agencies on the border line. The Lay-Waterson company established agency stores in Los Angeles, California; El Paso, Texas, and Galveston, but the largest number of sales of soldier's footwear is sent to Yuma, Arizona, which is a small city at the junction of the South Gila and Colorado rivers on the state boundary line and is just twelve miles from the Mexican line. Just across the line is a small station not shown on the map, of two or three hundred population, and here a dealer by the name of E. F. Sanguineti imports the Janesville-made shoes by the thousands and sell them to the soldiers. Sanguineti is practically the owner of the line, which, owing to his position on both sides of the line and the Colorado river affords him a excellent chance to bring the products across the line. The shoe dealer formed alliance with Villa during the early part of the revolution and his superior both financially and physical has gained the good graces of Villa and his property is well protected by the soldiers by the general's orders and he sells the shoes to the soldiers in a return bargain. The city of Yuma is on the southern line of the Southern Pacific and since the Lay-Waterson company obtained their first order on January 14th, they have been rewarded with many additional ones, and today received a telegram ordering one hundred pairs of high cut shoes suitable for army purposes.

At El Paso the shoes are sent across the line to Ciudad Juarez, only a distance of a few miles, where they are distributed among the soldiers of Villa at the army posts there. The product of the Janesville company is meeting with a large demand in Mexico and in the extreme southern states, the company making a high boot, fancifully trimmed, as required by the cowboys and ranchmen in the Panhandle district. The type of shoes used by the soldiers is the high cut semi-boot and made especially light, but able to withstand hard wear.

With the settling of the Mexican trouble the company expects to increase their output in the Mexican territory for their product has gained a wide reputation on the border line, and they are at present making a specialty of the soldiers' and cowboys' boots and shoes.

ROTATION OF CROPS AIDS WATER SUPPLY

Department Experts Find Swine Raising More Profitable With Good Foraging in Food and Housing.

ESPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE
Washington, April 22.—Farmers and pig growers do not always appreciate the value of green foods and succulent pastures for their animals. Too often the hog is considered a scavenger and his ability to utilize waste is regarded as his chief value. However well the pig serves this purpose, it will pay for good care, food and housing. Forage crops are especially beneficial to young animals. It is possible to grow them much more profitably and successfully when a good green field of palatable and nutritious pasture is provided.

Experiments and practical farmers' experiences prove that gains in weight are made at less cost on forage than on the dry lot. Brood sows can be carried through the season on pasture, at less cost than when grain fields are entirely depended upon. Foraging induces the animal to exercise and obtain fresh air and makes hogs cleaner and more wholesome. The exercise and air prevent the contraction of disease.

When animals so reared are put in the fattening pens, grain is unusually rapid and profitable. The green feeds are of much value just to keep the pig's digestive organs in good condition and the appetite keen.

The entire hog herd can be run on forage crops and will profit by this method of management.

Don H. Bark of Boise, in charge of investigations by the Department of Agriculture, relating to the duty of water, has written a statement which shows that rotation of crops and soil fertility is a great influence on fixing the amount of water needed for proper production.

"It has been long known," says Bark, "that a much greater yield of grain or potatoes and other crops could be made on fertile ground such as alfalfa soil than could be made upon arid soils that have never been fertilized in any way. Little has been known, however, as to the irrigation requirements of the increased yield on the fertile soils.

"The duty of the water investigation which has been carried on throughout Idaho during the last four years by the United States irrigation investigation department in co-operation with the State Land Board has thrown much new light on this subject.

Blue stem wheat on new soil that had never previously been cropped or fertilized, produced two thousand pounds of grain to the acre with an application of 1.1 acre-feet, at the Gooding experiment station during the 1910 season, while the same wheat on the same ground during the season of 1911 produced but 1,323 pounds of wheat to the acre with an application of 1.3 acre-feet per acre, showing a considerably less efficiency from the water because of the decreased fertility of the soil. An experiment with Big Four Oats showed similar results.

On many farms the straw is not only not made use of, but the farmer considers it a nuisance. So the straw is burned. On the exclusive farm to use the straw is a very difficult problem. Some tests that have been made indicate that it might be spread over the grain fields as a light coating—over the fall wheat in the autumn to help hold the snow and to hold the soil in a windy winter.

The best method of utilizing the straw, however, is to increase the live stock until the products of the farm, including the straw, are used up in caring for the animals. Such a farm will wear longer, will work easier and maintain a maximum crop yield for a much longer time.

The subjects of dairy stock and dairy farming are now receiving much attention throughout the country, particularly in newer sections where dairying has not been followed and where dairy stock is scarce.

Many of the irrigation projects special effort is being made by individual farmers and by groups and associations of farmers to obtain dairy stock.

In many cases the settlers are short of funds and cannot without assistance obtain the cows considered necessary for the profitable working of their farms. In these cases business men and banks have come forward and advanced the funds, securing the return of the loan with interest by mortgages.

Dairy cows of proven merit are obtained only at a high premium. The purchases of dairy cows must bear in mind that matured cow of proven merit is not for sale in any place in the United States for the average price which the settler in the new country can afford to pay.

It has also been learned that Tampa harbor has been most carefully filled with highly explosive and Admiral Mayo has received warnings to guard against any accident similar to that which happened to the Maine in Havana harbor. Everything depends upon the action of the Senate and the time which has been consumed by their discussion on the question of the president's power to request the calling out of additional military forces.

Will Not Talk.

Secretary Daniels left the cabinet meeting at 12:20. He was asked regarding the orders sent to Admiral Fletcher. "It would be very unwise for me to say anything at this time," was his reply.

Wait Report.

A report from Admiral Fletcher was moments ago awaited with interest in official circles in Washington. It was pointed out that President Wilson had ample cause for his action without waiting for the approval of the move by congress.

When the news reached the capital that the orders had gone to Admiral Fletcher, it aroused considerable enthusiasm among senators and represents.

Will Hurry Congress.

Democratic senators believed an order to the American commander to begin actual operations would hurry action of congress to back up the president in his present course. The republican leaders planned to champion the substitute amendment made by Senator Lodge, which referred to the long series of outrages against Americans in Mexico. This would be allowed, however, by the demands of the war party.

It was expected by the House leaders to adopt the motion of the foreign relations committee and to be laid before the senate soon after it met at noon.

No Unusual Alarm.

War department officials said there is nothing to necessitate the immediate order of troops. No unusual alarm is revealed in the border dispatches over anti-American outbreaks, but such communications as came in from frontier towns were forwarded to Brigadier General Bliss commanding the Mexican border post. Secretary Bryan said he was in a quiet mood.

KIMLIN WILL TRAIN EIGHT HORSES HERE

String of Likely Trotters and Pacers Arrive From Cherry Valley Other Fast Ones Coming. By C. E. (Buck) Hunter.

The past week, with the nice warm days, was a great inducement for B. K. Kimlin of Cherry Valley, Illinois, to move his stable of trotters and pacers to Janesville. Eight head of horses were in the shipment and most of them are green ones. Addition to being the only record horse at present, but Mr. Kimlin expects to add two or three more to his stable by the first of the month. Mr. Kimlin needs no public introduction to the people of Janesville, as it will be remembered he was with us last year for a few months and made such a remarkable campaign with the good trotter, Ernest Axtell, 2:08 1/2.

Word was received last Saturday from W. N. Millard of La Crosse that he would arrive here not later than Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Millard will bring with him six head, including Alice McGregor, 2:16 1/2, and The President Jr., 2:16 1/2. These five horses were the center of attraction during the training season here last year, and, great many things were said about this pair and a great deal was expected of them. Their numerous admirers would not have been disappointed had Alice McGregor not met with a bad accident at Darlington, Wis., the week after our races here in August, which almost meant the retirement of this good mare for the balance of her career, as she was only able to fill two of her important engagements after her accident, these two being the $3,000 stake at Hamlin Minn., and the $2,500 stake at Milwaukee. Then she was sent home and an informed one is now going sound and naturally. Great things will be expected of her this coming season.

Seigle & Sheridan have moved to the track with Mable Itiser, 2:18 1/4. Mable is looking big and strong this spring, the result of her good wintering, and ought to prove her real worth in the classes to which she is eligible. A green pacer by Ed Custer, 2:16, will also be trained by Seigle & Sheridan, and this fellow from general appearance acts like a real live one.

The track was put in shape last Friday and is ready for a few more days, until the rail birds will have the chance to look them over and then make predictions for the future.

I have not been able to learn the names and breeding of the horses in the Kimlin barns or the new ones that Mr. Millard will bring, and as soon as everyone is settled in good shape all the real names and breeding will be found out.

FEDERALS TAKE FIRST BATTLE AGAINST FOE: BIG SIX THE LOSERS

The Federals, although without their general Richards, took another camp of the major into harbor last night, according to late dispatches from the front, and were one step nearer the coveted goal-of-first place in Miller's bowling tournament.

Captain Richards was called into conference on whether to salute the flag and Nelson was Charge de Affairs among the Federal ranks last night. In the first charge the Feds spread disaster among the Big Six, broadside knocking down a 743 score, killing 57 more plus than did Abram's firing squad.

The Feds made a flank movement and backed with their artillery, bowled over the Big Six bowlers and gained a safe lead.

With their standard almost lost to the enemy, the Big Six recruited and won the last battle by forty points, but when the dead and wounded were tallied up, the Feds had won by 107 points.

Tonight the Miller's invade Beloit to have little war of their own, to hold their lead over Beloit.

WATCHING AND WAITING.
When history is told to future generations the name of Woodrow Wilson will be handed down as one of the diplomats who has sat in the presidential chair and demonstrated to the world at large that the policy of "watching and waiting" was perhaps the best in the long run. For the past year the insurgent element of the United States has chafed under the restrictions laid down by the president relative to the Mexican situation. Mexico has been insolent. Mexico has been exasperating, and still down at Washington the head of the nation has kept a smiling face to the multitude and maintained an attitude of "watching and waiting." Mexico finally becomes so insolent, insults the stars and stripes openly, as it has done covertly for months past, and then the watching and waiting becomes a thing of the past. Our president stands before the two houses of congress, the house of representatives and the senate, and asks for permission to enforce his demands that Mexico apologize. He expresses the thought in such language that it can not be mistaken, that the United States does not wish to wage a war with our sister republic, now in the midst of a civil strife, but simply to enforce suitable recognition of the insult offered to the flag of the nation and if necessary to enforce this recognition and apology by use of the naval and military forces of the United States. Congress grants this request and the army and navy are ordered to demand the apology and suitable reprisals for the delay in recognition of the claims. This is Wilson's policy. He does not declare war. Far from it, he deplores the necessity of armed force to demand such an apology, but once that armed force is on its way to the interior of Mexico, once the Mexicans resent the interference of the United States by armed forces, then Mexico declares war, not the United States, and Wilson is free to seek just reprisals. His address to congress Monday was one of the clearest of state papers yet presented since his administration took office. It clearly defines the attitude of the United States and at the same time paves the way open for armed interference in Mexican affairs that could not otherwise have been secured without an open declaration of war. Meanwhile the policy of watching and waiting has been justified. The army and navy of the United States is ready for any emergency. They have been drilled for the past year with the one idea in view, the possible conflict with Mexico, and today they face the situation fully prepared. There have been times when the public has not understood Wilson's attitude, have believed that he lacked the backbone to assert his authority, to defend this country from any insults, but the attitude he took before the joint session of congress, his words of peace with the gloved hand of mail in reserve, has demonstrated that in future days he will be recognized as have other presidents, by some cognomen, as was Jackson as "Old Hickory," Taylor as "Rough and Ready," Lincoln as the "Rat-splitter," and Wilson as "Watchful and Waiting." It is a wise policy the great wisdom of which will be realized later, and if war comes the United States is better prepared to defend its attitude than it has been since it declared its independence from England on that memorable Fourth of July in 1776.

NON-PARTISAN TICKET.

It may be all right for a few men, who are in a position to lose nothing and gain everything by a reorganization of the republican party, to sacrifice the needs of the taxpayers of the state by maintaining that what Wisconsin needs in the reorganization of the republican party placing the question of taxation into the background. What Wisconsin needs is a non-partisan ticket, a non-partisan candidate for governor, and for every office in the state, legislative and otherwise, at the coming fall election. They must have this if they hope to succeed. The democrats have about centered upon Karel as their candidate and his detractors and enemies have immediately started the old cry of catholic and anti-catholic against him. It means a division within a division of the body politic of the state. There are men so narrow that they see a great evil in a candidate's religious beliefs. It seems impossible, but it is so, and consequently Karel is being made to suffer for his religious belief and doctrine. A non-partisan ticket is a necessity. It must come and the sooner the old-time politicians listen to the demand of the taxpayers the better off we will be.

UNITED WE STAND.
United we stand, divided we fall. The city administration today enters upon a new epoch of its existence under the commission form of government. During two strenuous years it has faced many responsibilities. Left with a heritage the council in department had willed them, they have faced responsibilities that have proved the metal of the men behind the firing line. Today they enter upon a new regime. Mayor Fathers continues in office, Councilman Cummings continues in office and Councilman Goodman takes his office. The latter represents a different element of the voting public of the city. That he will make good is certain by those who know him. That the next two years will be far more harmonious than the past two is asserted by men who have been closest to the administration and the anti-administration leaders. Chancy Millmore, who retires after two years as a member of the city governing board, does so with the satisfaction of a work well done. He was elected by a constituency that has stood by him and he leaves his work in such shape that his successor can continue it without any delay or serious inconvenience. It is the duty of every citizen having the best interests of Janesville at heart to aid in every possible way in the support of the new administration. That Mr. Goodman will make an efficient street commissioner is assured, and what is needed to back him is the moral support of the citizens. They have demonstrated in the past they stood behind the other two officials and a united front is now desired. United we stand, divided we fall.

A WARNING!
The United States is wavering on the verge of a war with a sister republic. That it may be averted is the hope of every citizen who has the best interests of the nation at heart. However, if we are to go to war let us go fully prepared. Let us start the struggle with a full understanding of what it means. War is not a game. War is not a plaything to be enjoyed, then cast aside. It is a stern reality. It means the loss of life and limb to those who play it. It means the breaking down of health, unless proper precautions are taken for the sanitary care of the camps, the careful supervision of the food and the general condition of the enlisted men watched over by faithful, conscientious officers. This is one of the most essential parts of any armed conflict and one that can not be looked upon lightly. War is bad enough at best but with inefficient men in charge of the important departments of the war bureau it means just what Sherman said it was.

THE QUESTION.
Does Janesville want to saddle itself with a debt of three hundred thousand dollars to satisfy the whims of a few idealists who would enforce upon the city the municipal ownership of the water works? That is the question that will soon confront the voters of the city. Are not your taxes high enough as they are, despite the fact the Janesville tax rate is one of the lowest in the state, to increase them to an extreme that is not necessary to your health and happiness? Think well when the question is presented for a vote and cast your ballot against the proposition of increasing the city's bonded indebtedness by $300,000.

These times may not be due to the tariff problems that confront the manufacturer, but just the same it is a good thing for democracy that the present war scare has come along to give them a chance to increase their revenue by increased taxation so as to make up the deficiency they are trying so hard to cover while declaring the tariff has not hurt anyone. Meanwhile the thousands of idle workmen may find work and may not.

Days and nights look alike to congressmen down in Washington just now. With the president seeking to enforce his ideas upon that august body they must stand attention at all times so as to be sure to be on the right side of the question when the proper time comes.

Weary After A Week Of The World

"It's the pace! It's the pace!" exclaimed a banker recently in explanation of a prominent man's suicide.

Our times are driving people too hard. Sanitariums full of nervous wrecks are sufficient evidence of this. Material cares and worries are killing thousands.

What is the remedy—or at least, where is a refuge?

One hard driven editor gave this terse answer when asked why he went to church every Sunday morning: "I'd go crazy if I didn't."

This phrase tells as much as treatise on psychology. Every one of us needs a refuge from the world and its cares.

As George Herbert says, every man and woman should "by all means use some time to be alone. Salute thyself! See what thy soul doth wear!"

It is not enough to be alone at some sport or in the woods. We need for our soul's poise an apartness from the everyday things, but we equally need nearness to God.

In God's house and on God's day, amid people seeking God, we should sit open-souled to the voices of another world.

PLANS TO COVER THE MANURE PILES WHERE FLIES BREED MADE

List Promising That Care Will be Taken During Summer Months Readily Signed.

The crusade against the fly is not to be waged alone by the children of the city, but by business men as well. The committee of the Commercial club having the clean-up day in charge, have started a little crusade at their own end and this time against the manure piles, the favorite breeding place for flies. A contest is being circulated which is being received with enthusiasm by owners and users of horses to the effect that they must manure in a covered box and use some powdered borax to soak in each eight bushels of manure, the manure then to be wetted out with water.

The United States experts have suggested the use of powdered borax, one pound for each eight bushels of manure, the manure then to be wetted out with water.

The speeches were all either great addresses by some great man, or extracts from books and they were learned by the competitors.

In the afternoon contest, Carl Schooler, Father William Mahoney, and Professor Scheuton found it necessary to divide the men into two groups at first, and in doing so, he was fortunate to have a like number in each elimination contest.

Eleven speakers spoke yesterday afternoon, and the same number were entered in the evening contest.

M'GOVERN REFUSES EXTRA SESSION CALL OF THE LEGISLATURE

The Question of Taxes

"During the past ten years the state has paid over more money to its local subdivisions — the cities, villages, towns and counties — than it has received from them in direct taxes. By and large, therefore, the state government has not been a burden upon taxpayers, but their benefactor. Nevertheless last year's tax bills were high. As a result the people have not infrequently complained. Most of these taxes were due as a rule to action by the people themselves through their town, city and county governments. But a part also was due to the state. For a number of years the annual state levy was about $250,000. Last year, because of actions of agents or blunders, as one may see fit to regard them, the action of the people in the towns and counties in enormously increasing the appropriations for good roads and the excessive appropriation made by the last legislature, the amount of the state levy suddenly jumped to $7,600,000. State taxes, therefore, were more than doubled. But the conditions that brought about this levy were exceptional and transitory. There is no good reason why the next state assessment should not be kept down approximately to the figure customary in the past."

Policy of Economy.

"This, I understand, is the ostensible object of the petition. But to accomplish a special meeting of the legislature is not necessary. All that is needed is to continue the policy of retrenchment and economy which was begun under my direction immediately after the adjournment of the last legislature. Satisfied, as was that the appropriations made at that time were unnecessarily large, I inaugurated a policy of economy in disbursement of public money which, if steadily pursued, will minimize the harm of excessive appropriations, if indeed it does not completely neutralize it. Because money has been generously appropriated, it does not follow that it should be spent extravagantly. Manifestly it is the amount of money spent and to be spent, not the sums appropriated that determines the size of the state levy and makes taxes, so far as the state is responsible for them, high or low."

Last Year's Taxes Paid.

"Last year's taxes have been paid. Reduction of the same is out of the question. All that can be done now, either with or without a special session of the legislature, is to keep down the next state assessment. The petition before me speaks of a possible total reduction of $4,000,000; but it is apparent that only half this saving is to be made by the state: $1,000,000 out of building funds and another $1,000,000 out of the state highway appropriation. For the petition proceeds to say:

"It is fair to assume that the county and local levies for state highways will each be reduced by an equal amount thus effecting a total reduction of $2,000,000 in the taxes for state highways to be collected at the end of this year."

"The present highway appropriation is $1,200,000. This plan proposes to reduce it to $800,000. How the legislature, if called together in special session, could accomplish this result, I do not know. These responses to my first inquiry concerning what reduction, if any, was desired in the appropriation for good roads, 101, or 17 per cent took no definite action; 254, or 44 per cent, voted to repeat the highway law; 140, or 34 per cent, voted to reduce the appropriation; and 81, or 14 per cent voted to leave the law as it is."

Regards Highway Law.

"Frequently those in favor of repealing the highway law opposed a special session; and often those in favor of a special session wanted no change in the highway law but did strongly in favor of abolishing the commissions or to cut down the university or normal school appropriations. In many cases towns voted at the same time for a repeal of the highway law and a grant of money for highway improvement almost as large as the before. When, moreover, it is considered that the inhabitants of the cities and the villages of the state, who constitute half its population, though not consulted, are, as I am told, overwhelmingly against the calling of a special session for the purpose of repealing or emasculating the state highway law, it is manifest that there is no clear mandate from the people in favor of such action."

Saving Made By Governor.

"One reason why the plan proposed in the petition should not be adopted is that a great deal more than this amount can and will be saved by the state without an extra session of the legislature. I have written, as Governor, to prevent the use of money appropriated for building purposes, Sections 382a, 406a and 563a of the statutes, as provided. Without invoking this power, however, but merely by continuing the policy of economical administration adopted after the close of the last legislature and concurred in by the governing boards of all the institutions of the state, before the end of the next fiscal period approximately $2,455,000 can and will be saved out of present appropriations. This amount is almost half a million dollars more than the maximum saving proposed in the petition. It is made up of the following items:

New buildings at the University of Wisconsin $800,000
State aid to highways 600,000
New buildings to be constructed under the direction of the Board of Control 300,000
New building at Stout Institute 200,000
New buildings at the Normal Schools 300,000
New buildings at the State Fair Grounds 250,000

Total $2,455,000

Agree to Reductions.

"The University Regents, the State Highway Commission, the Board of Control, the Industrial Education Board, the Normal School Regents and the Board of Agriculture have all agreed to these reductions in their respective appropriations and have agreed to use the savings amounts to be omitted from the next state assessment. The postponement of the construction of these buildings will, of course, involve inconvenience and temporary limitations in the usefulness of these institutions and branches of the state service, but no great or lasting harm will be done. All buildings now in process of construction will be postponed until the state's unnecessary expense, inconvenience and agitation attendant upon such a session. There is no occasion for haste, stampede or panic. By denying the prayer of the petition nothing will be lost, but the politics of a special session."

Discontinue Factional Intrigue.

"Much is said in the petition about the danger of a reactionary victory in Wisconsin this fall. I have no such fear; and if those who profess to believe in the public policies with which induction that may also be effected in this state is identified would disconcert the legislature in time to prevent such an occurrence, they too would soon cease to fear."

"The petition is denied."

The Evening Chit-Chat

BUSINESS WANDERLUST.

"Every young man is assayed in the mind of his immediate superior from the day he begins work, and after a time, if he has merit, he is assayed in the council chambers of the firm."—Andrew Carnegie.

THIS OTHER day a young friend of mine came to the house to ask my advice. He was suffering from what, for want of a better term, I call business wanderlust. He felt that the work he was doing did not begin to tax his capabilities; he wanted a chance "to grow."

"It's a small place and a small concern. It seems to me that if I shift to a larger city and a bigger concern, I will get along faster. What do you think?" he asked.

I thought immediately of a conversation I had had only a few days before, with the head of one of the largest concerns of its kind in New York.

The president, prosperous, efficient, sat facing me in his private office. The talk somehow shifted to the subject of business success.

"Twenty years ago," he said, laughing, "I thought I was side-tracked for life. At that time I was a chemist in a small drug concern upstate. I could see no chance to grow. I should have moved to New York and struck out anew, if it had not been for my wife and children."

"As near as I could see, I was stagnating. I knew that the work I was doing did not begin to tax my capabilities. Still, it was my work and I was fond of it. So I plodded ahead."

I shall never forget my surprise when, one day, the man who founded this business wrote and asked me to come to New York to see him. I knew him only by name. And even greater was my surprise when he offered me the position of general manager.

"But what do you know about me?" I asked. "I heard of your work and I have been keeping an eye on you for some time."

"Of course I took the position—jumped at it. Nowdays, when I hear of young men being side-tracked somewhere, and feeling as if the current of life was sweeping by, leaving them hopelessly stranded, I smile. The man who is doing an honest, faithful, efficient day's work, six days every week, is never stranded. Somebody is watching him."

"And I am ever so glad that I never became discouraged, and never slackened up in my work."

This is what I told the young man who asked my advice. Now I pass it along to all of my reader friends who feel that their work is a very little part of what they could accomplish if they only had a chance—a chance they fear never will get.

Perhaps somewhere, somebody is watching you; perhaps your chance is on the way.

(1) It may be that your general health needs to be improved. You cannot hope to have good healthy hair unless your whole body is good and healthy. Take plenty of outdoor exercise, not too violent; eat nourishing food; sleep at least nine hours every night; keep clean inside and out.

Now, for the hair—it must be given at least 100 strokes every day with a medium firm brush which will reach through the hair to the scalp. Once a week dip this brush in kerosene (coal oil) and brush the hair thoroughly with it. Kerosene is about the safest germicide you can use. Every night, before retiring, rub a little bit of castor oil into the scalp and gently massage the scalp. Let your hair have plenty of air and light.

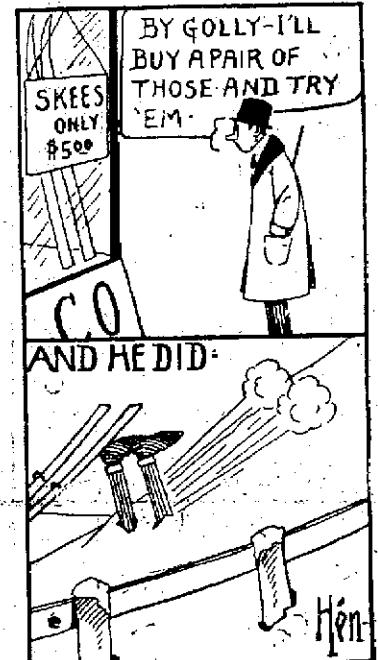

The hair may seem to come out a bit worse at first, but in a month you will begin to see an improvement.

(2) Once every three or four weeks is often enough for a shampoo. Use eggs for shampooing. Beat two eggs, rub well into the hair and scalp, let dry, then rinse the eggs with lukewarm water into which you have put a little ammonia or baking soda. Rinse the hair several times in plain lukewarm water after this, then brush it dry.

MRS. ALEXANDER GRAMAH BELL.

By Selene Armstrong Harmon.

When Helen Keller¹ and Dr. Maria Montessori, founder of the Montessori educational method, clasped hands for the first time, Miss Keller, with a great light shining in her face, said:

"Blessed are the feet of her who comes across the sea with a message of liberty to the children of America."

After Mrs. Bell's own children grew up there came grandchildren in whose education she was naturally interested. One cold day in February, 1912, she journeyed to Tarrytown, N. Y., to see a school about which her friend, Mrs. S. S. McClure, had told her. It was the Montessori school conducted by Madame Montessori's first foreign pupil, Miss Anne George, an American girl. After seeing Miss George teach these babies—few of the children had reached primary school age—Mrs. Bell felt she had found the ideal method of education for her little grandchild.

The Montessori method appealed to Mrs. Bell, first, because it is a method of anti-education. This is the child educates himself, not through the exercise of his teachers' and parents' will and reason, but his own. In a Montessori children's house, or school, each child does exactly what he wants to do so long as he does not interfere with the rights and liberties of the other children. By this method, Mrs. Bell believes, he soon learns for himself the difference between license and liberty. He learns to live by law instead of by rule. His experience teaches him self-restraint no less than self-development.

As a result of Mrs. Bell's interest and enthusiasm, Miss George is now principal of a Montessori school in Washington. This is attended by five of Mrs. Bell's grandchildren, and by sixty other little ones. In addition to this, a Montessori school has been established in the tenement district, which is attended by sixteen children, Both Dr. and Mrs. Bell have always taken the keenest interest in the education of children. In the hope of interesting American mothers in what she considers the greatest method of education and one of the surest means of development so far discovered for the normal child, Mrs. Bell consented to discuss with her interviewer the methods of the Montessori system.

Like most mothers, she said, she was cissatisfied when her children were young with the prevailing methods of rearing and educating little ones. The problems of discipline and punishment and reward and of character building were acute problems which never seemed to solve to her satisfaction. She deplored also what she considered a fearful waste of time in deferring systematic education for five or six years.

of Mrs. Bell's grandchildren, and by sixty other little ones. In addition to this, a Montessori school has been established in the tenement district, which is attended by sixteen children,

Both Dr. and Mrs. Bell have always taken the keenest interest in the education of children. In the hope of interesting American mothers in what she considers the greatest method of education and one of the surest means of development so far discovered for the normal child, Mrs. Bell consented to discuss with her interviewer the methods of the Montessori system.

Like most mothers, she said, she was cissatisfied when her children were young with the prevailing methods of rearing and educating little ones. The problems of discipline and punishment and reward and of character building were acute problems which never seemed to solve to her satisfaction. She deplored also what she considered a fearful waste of time in deferring systematic education for five or six years.

After Mrs. Bell's own children grew up there came grandchildren in whose education she was naturally interested. One cold day in February, 1912, she journeyed to Tarrytown, N. Y., to see a school about which her friend, Mrs. S. S. McClure, had told her. It was the Montessori school conducted by Madame Montessori's first foreign pupil, Miss Anne George, an American girl. After seeing Miss George teach these babies—few of the children had reached primary school age—Mrs. Bell felt she had found the ideal method of education for her little grandchild.

The Montessori method appealed to Mrs. Bell, first, because it is a method of anti-education. This is the child educates himself, not through the exercise of his teachers' and parents' will and reason, but his own. In a Montessori children's house, or school, each child does exactly what he wants to do so long as he does not interfere with the rights and liberties of the other children. By this method, Mrs. Bell believes, he soon learns for himself the difference between license and liberty. He learns to live by law instead of by rule. His experience teaches him self-restraint no less than self-development.

As a result of Mrs. Bell's interest and enthusiasm, Miss George is now principal of a Montessori school in Washington. This is attended by five of Mrs. Bell's grandchildren, and by sixty other little ones. In addition to this, a Montessori school has been established in the tenement district, which is attended by sixteen children,

LAKOTA MINSTRELS WILL BE GREATER THAN EVER BEFORE

Janesville's Popular Club Promises to Furnish Extraordinary Features on the 28th.

The Lakota club of this city, who have been presenting to the public annually for the past several seasons their famous minstrel specialties, including popular songs and sayings, in and about Janesville, together with the introduction of some new sketch full of humor, have what they believe to be the best minstrel show, ready for presentation, that they have ever given in this city before.

With a complete line of the latest song hits, and with genuine comedians as members of the club, the Lakota minstrel men will give this year a program of mirth and extreme interest, one of an exceptional type.

As has been the plan in the past, but six of the members will be blacked up, and will engage in considerable conversation with the audience, who likewise does much of the talking. The song hits will intermingle as before, with the entire club joining in on the choruses. A quartet including four of Janesville's best singers and members of the club, will render several selections.

The opening chorus will be a fitting beginning for the program that follows. Every member takes part in this song, and the medleys are unusually good. The sketch which opens the second part of the program has a local setting. It is doubly interesting and better than all former sketches presented by the club.

Those who have witnessed the minstrels in the past have always passed a satisfied criticism on the show.

The minstrels have been greeted on every occasion by a packed house.

The members will hold a parade on Tuesday noon, the day of the evening on which they will present their show. The Bower City band has been secured to lead the procession through the main streets of the city.

The second reading was given by Mr. L. M. Holsapple on Forbes Robertson.

Forbes Robertson is considered the greatest player of Hamlet the world has ever seen.

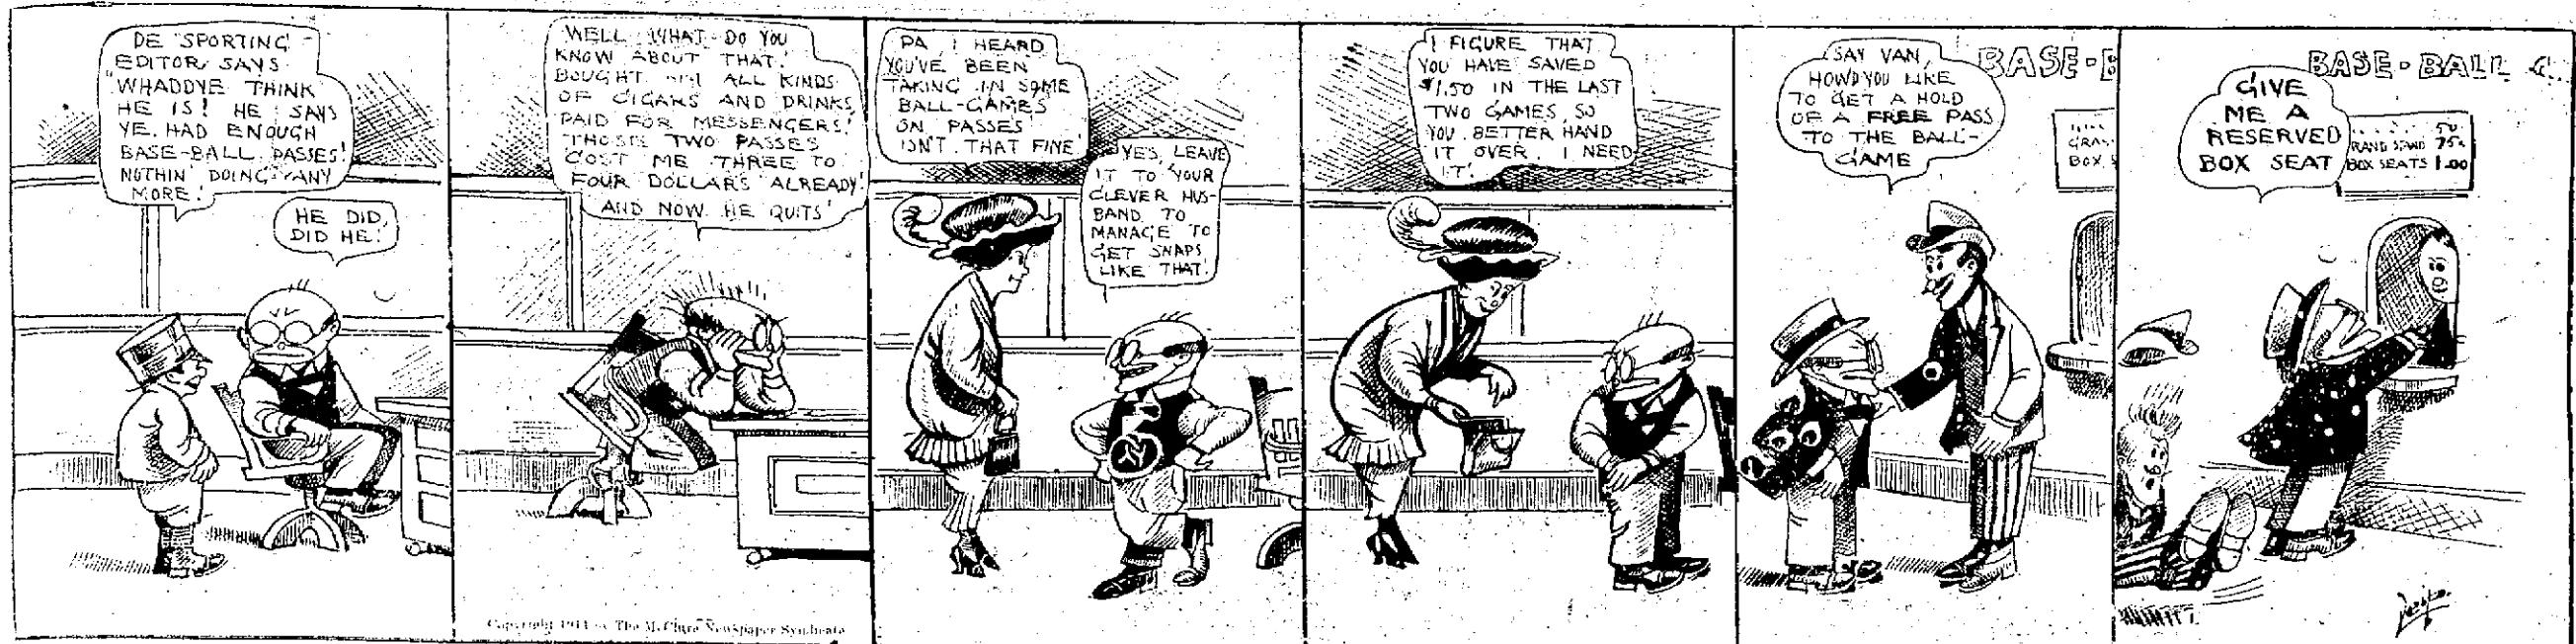

The members of the club were urged to attend the annual meeting in Chicago when Robertson makes his famous appearance in that city in Hamlet in the near future.

The death scene in which Hamlet dies, regarded as the most clever piece of finesse acting in the entire play, Mrs. Holsapple gave a clear picture of this scene in her reading.

A newspaper clipping on "The Reviving of the Tradition" was given by Mrs. Day. "The Truth" was being revived all over the world, and at present is playing very successfully in New York City and Boston. Clyde Fitch, the author, accomplished a great work in writing this production, for it contains in its lines certain qualities which practically every person has to a certain extent.

The Janesville Dramatic club has passed a motion to stage this play sometime this spring, but the committee on arrangements failed to report last evening.

The Valiants of Virginia

By Hallie Erminie Rives
Our Post-War

Illustrated by Louis West

Copyright, 1914, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.

She sat up in bed, trembling. Then she rose, and opening the door with caution, crept down the stairs, sliding her hot hand before her along the cool polished banister. As she passed through the lower hall, a sound on the porch, scented her, stirred, thumped his tail on the flooring, and whined. Groaning her way to the dining-room, she lighted a candle and passed through a corridor into a low-ceilinged chamber employed as a general receptacle—a glorified garret, as Mrs. Dandridge dubbed it.

It showed a strange assemblage! A row of chests, stored with winter clothing, gave forth a clean pungent smell of cedar, and at one side stood an antique spinet and a worn set of furniture.

Shirley had turned her miserable eyes on a book-shelf along one wall. The volume it contained had been her father's, and among them stood a row of tomes taller than her fellows—the bound numbers of a county newspaper, beginning before the war. The back of each was stamped with the year. She was deciphering these faded imprints. "Thirty years ago," she whispered; "yes, here it is."

She set down the candle and dragged out one of the huge leather-backs. Staggering under the weight, she rested its edge on the table and began feverishly to turn the pages, her eye on the date line. She stopped presently with a quick breath—she had reached May 15th. The year was that of the duel: the date was the day following the Jessamine anniversary. Fearfully her eye overran the columns.

Then suddenly she put her open hand on the page as though to blot out the words, every trace of color stricken from cheek and brow. But the line seemed to glow up through the very flesh: "Died, May 14th; Edward Sassoon, in his twenty-sixth year."

The book slipped to the floor with a crash that echoed through the room. It was true, then! It was Sassoon's death that her mother mourned. The man in whose arms she had stood such a little while ago by the old dial of Damery Court was the son of the man who had killed him!

"Oh, God," she whispered, "just when I was so happy! Oh, mother, mother! You loved him, and your heart broke when he died. It was Valiant who broke it—Valiant—Valiant. His father!"

She slipped down upon the bare floor and crouched there shuddering and agonized, her disheveled hair wet with tears. Was her love to be but the thing of an hour, a single clasp? and then, forever, nothing? His father's deed was not his fault. Yet how could she love a man whose every feature brought a pang to that mother she loved more than herself? So, over and over, the wheel of her thought turned in the same desolate groove, and over and over the paroxysms of grief and longing submerged her.

Noisily as she had descended, she crept again up the stair. As she passed her mother's door, she paused a moment, and laying her arms out across it, pressed her lips to the dark grain of the wood.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Awakening.

The sun had passed the meridian next day when Valiant awoke, from a sleep as deep as Abou ben Adhem's, yet one crowded with flying dreams. The one great fact of Shirley's love had lain at the core of all these honied images, and his mind was full of it as his eyes opened, wide all at once, to the new day.

He looked at his watch and rolled from the bed with a laugh. "Past twelve!" he exclaimed. "Good heavens! What about all the work I had laid out for today?"

Presently he was splashing in the lake, shooting under his curved hand unerring jets of water at Chum, who danced about the rim barking, now venturing to wet a valorous paw, now scrambling up the bank to escape the watery javelins.

Valiant came up the terraces with his blood bounding to a new repartee. Crossing the garden, he ran quickly to the little close which held the sundial and pulled a single great passion-flower. He stood a moment holding it to his face, his nostrils catching its faint elusive perfume. Only last night, under the moon, he had stood there with Shirley in his arms. A gush of the unbelievable sweetness of that moment poured over him. His face softened.

Standing with his sandaled feet deep in the white blossoms, the sun on his damp hair and the loose robe clinging to his moist limbs, he gave himself to a sudden day-dream. A wonderful waking dream of joy overflowing years of ambitionless ease; of the Damery Court that should be in days to come.

When he came from the little close there was a new mystery in the sunshine, a fresh and joyous meaning in the intense blue overarching of the imponderable sky. Every bird-note held its own love-secret. A wood-thrush sang it from a silver birch beside the summer-house, and a bob-white whistled it in the little valley beyond. Even the long trip-hammer of a far-away woodpecker beat a radiant tattoo.

He paused to greet the flaming peacock that sent out a curdling screech, in which the tentative potterack! potterack! of a guinea-fowl tangled itself softly. "Go on," he invited. "Explode all you want to, old Fire-Cracker. Hang your purple-and-gold pessimism! You only make the birds sound sweater. Perhaps that's what you're for—who knows?"

He tried to work, but work was not for that marvelous afternoon. He wandered about the gardens, planning this or that addition: a little longer sweep to the pansy-bed—a clump of bulrushes at the farther end of the lake. He peered into the stable: a saddle horse stood there now, but there should be more steeds stamping in those stalls one day, good horses.

He had reached May 15th. The year was that of the duel: the date was the day following the Jessamine anniversary. Fearfully her eye overran the columns.

Then suddenly she put her open hand on the page as though to blot out the words, every trace of color stricken from cheek and brow. But the line seemed to glow up through the very flesh: "Died, May 14th; Edward Sassoon, in his twenty-sixth year."

The book slipped to the floor with a crash that echoed through the room. It was true, then! It was Sassoon's death that her mother mourned. The man in whose arms she had stood such a little while ago by the old dial of Damery Court was the son of the man who had killed him!

"Oh, God," she whispered, "just when I was so happy! Oh, mother, mother! You loved him, and your heart broke when he died. It was Valiant who broke it—Valiant—Valiant. His father!"

and then, forever, nothing? His father's deed was not his fault. Yet how could she love a man whose every feature brought a pang to that mother she loved more than herself? So, over and over, the wheel of her thought turned in the same desolate groove, and over and over the paroxysms of grief and longing submerged her.

Noisily as she had descended, she crept again up the stair. As she passed her mother's door, she paused a moment, and laying her arms out across it, pressed her lips to the dark grain of the wood.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Awakening.

The sun had passed the meridian next day when Valiant awoke, from a sleep as deep as Abou ben Adhem's, yet one crowded with flying dreams. The one great fact of Shirley's love had lain at the core of all these honied images, and his mind was full of it as his eyes opened, wide all at once, to the new day.

He looked at his watch and rolled from the bed with a laugh. "Past twelve!" he exclaimed. "Good heavens! What about all the work I had laid out for today?"

Presently he was splashing in the lake, shooting under his curved hand riches, and that their faces shone as the faces of angels. "I think I shall go about henceforth with my face shining, so that all men will see that I have riches—you love for me, dear.

"I am so happy I can hardly see the words—or perhaps it is that the sun has set. I am sending this over by Uncle Jefferson. Send me back just word by him, sweetheart, to say I may come to you tonight. And add the three short words I am so thirsty to hear over and over—one verb between two pronouns—so that I can kiss them all at once!"

"Dear Bluebird of Mine:

"I can't wait any longer to talk to you. Less than a day has passed since we were together, but it might have been eons; if one measured time by heart-beats. What have you been doing and thinking, I wonder? I have spent those eons in the garden, just wandering about, dreaming over those wonderful, wonderful moments by the sun-dial. Ah, dear little wild heart born of the flowers, with the soul of a bird (yet you are woman, too!) that old disk is marking happy hours now for me!"

"How have I deserved this thing that has come to me?—sad bungler that I have been! Sometimes it seems too glad and sweet, and I am suddenly desperately afraid I shall wake to find myself facing another dull morning in that old, useless, empty life of mine. I am very humble, dear, before your for—who knows?"

He tried to work, but work was not for that marvelous afternoon. He wandered about the gardens, planning this or that addition: a little longer sweep to the pansy-bed—a clump of bulrushes at the farther end of the lake. He peered into the stable: a saddle horse stood there now, but there should be more steeds stamping in those stalls one day, good horses.

He had reached May 15th. The year was that of the duel: the date was the day following the Jessamine anniversary. Fearfully her eye overran the columns.

Then suddenly she put her open hand on the page as though to blot out the words, every trace of color stricken from cheek and brow. But the line seemed to glow up through the very flesh: "Died, May 14th; Edward Sassoon, in his twenty-sixth year."

RESULTS COUNT

"Say, Mary, I have been converted," said a young girl to her chum the other day.

As Mary was never over five blocks from the speaker and there had been no attending of revivals or the like in the near past, she was frankly curious.

"What are you trying to tell me, speak plainly; unb burden yourself; I cannot understand," she said to her smiling friend.

"Oh! of course it's about my Easter finery," was the laughing rejoinder. "I called up six dress-makers to ask if I might bring over the goods for my gown. From all came the polite answer that they were sorry, but they could not take it if I wanted it in the near future."

"Now when I purchase a gown in the piece, I just want it as soon as I possibly can have it. I sleep with visions of that unfinished gown winding its folds about me. It gets creepy!"

"Try the want ad columns for a dress maker," said Mother, who had been a patient listener to my ravings about dress-makers who would not stop all other sewing and do for me the moment I asked them to."

"I did as she suggested and while I did it grumbly and without faith, I was agreeably surprised. I found a woman who finished my dress on time, and in every way it is highly satisfactory."

This is just a little extract from real life to try to drive home to your mind this fact. The want ads are your willing, efficient servants. Will you use them?
